Travelling around London

London has a very good transport system. There are thirteen railways stations, of which the most important are Victoria, Waterloo, Paddington and Kings Cross, and eleven Underground lines.

The London Underground, or “Tube” is the oldest underground railway in the world. The first section opened in 1863 and in 1890 it became the first underground railway to operate electric trains. It is the second largest metro system in the world, after the Shanghai Metro.

The “Tube” is a very fast way to travel, but if you want to see the sights it is better to take a bus. English people queue at bus stops, because when the bus is nearly full only a few people can get on. You usually pay the fare to the bus conductor, but on some more modern buses there isn’t a conductor so you pay the driver. If you can, sit on the top deck so you get a good view of the city during your journey.

Once, in the 1950s, a crowded bus was travelling over Tower Bridge. It was almost in the middle of the bridge when the bridge began to open by mistake. The bus driver thought very quickly: “It's too late to step on the brakes.” So he accelerated and the bus literally flew through the air, jumped the gap from one arm of the bridge to another and landed safely on the other side.
